

Premiere: Derek Piotr – The Old Lady and the Devil

written by Alex Gallacher 28 April, 2022

Derek Piotr has become something of a regular on these pages in recent months. In January, we interviewed the musician and folklorist (read it here) following the release of Last Wisps of the Old Ways: North Carolina Mountain Singing. Then last month, we premiered his single “How Can I Keep from Crying?” taken from his forthcoming album The Devil Knows How.

Today we have the pleasure of sharing another track from The Devil Knows How, due for release on 13th May and which can be pre-ordered via Bandcamp here.

As I said then, one of the things I loved about Derek’s folk collecting work was his love for the more unvarnished and “real” – songs sung as part of everyday life rather than delivered under the banner of a singing profession. While those field recordings influence his own work, which carries that similar earthy feel, an equally loose experimental quality leaves these songs unbound and uprooted. This can give a dreamlike quality to the tracks which weaves experimental excursions into field recordings. The results are both absorbing, experimental and unique. I was genuinely excited by what I heard when Derek sent the album and it’s unlike anything else I’ve heard. These folk songs are untethered and free.
